

Peer Perspective The Joint Commission

What makes The Joint Commission the accrediting body of choice for so many organizations in behavioral health and human services?

The accreditation experience with the Joint Commission has been exceptional. We've had a great relationship with the Joint Commission, and we've been able to work with them on a variety of issues. The Joint Commission has been a great partner in our journey to improve our organization. We've been able to work with them on a variety of issues, and we've been able to work with them on a variety of issues.

Chelsea Collins, Director of Performance Improvement and Accreditation, Rosecrance

The Joint Commission has been a great partner in our journey to improve our organization. We've been able to work with them on a variety of issues, and we've been able to work with them on a variety of issues.

Diane Butcher, Chief Operating Officer, The Renfrew Center

Having a Joint Commission accreditation is a great achievement, and it's a great achievement. The accreditation process has been a great experience, and it's a great experience. We've been able to work with them on a variety of issues, and we've been able to work with them on a variety of issues.